

write a 4 sentence short story about a rickshaw driver in lahore who found a magical lamp

Thought 1 time(s) >

Aslam had been driving his rickshaw through the walled city of Lahore for thirty years, so he thought nothing could surprise him anymore — until he found the brass lamp tucked inside the torn seat cushion. When he rubbed the soot off it that evening, a genie the color of monsoon clouds rose up and offered him three wishes, but Aslam just laughed and asked for a second lamp. The genie stared at him, confused, as Aslam explained that one lamp was already paying for his daughter's wedding, and the second would go to his neighbor whose son needed a heart operation — and by morning, the only one still burning was the one in his own pocket, warm against his ribs like a second heartbeat.

write the ending to be funny

The genie stared at him, confused, as Aslam explained that one lamp was already paying for his daughter's wedding, and the second would go to his neighbor whose son needed a heart operation. By morning, his wife had used the first lamp to wish for a bigger kitchen, his mother-in-law for a son who calls every Sunday, and Aslam was left standing in the courtyard with his own three wishes — a man who'd been outbid at his own miracle.
